

Our Father's Identity

And you shall take no gift: for the gift blinds the wise, and perverts the words of the righteous.

SHEMOTH (EXODUS) 23:8

Motives to Conceal

The educational, political and scientific systems in our present societies are dysfunctional. They are built on a system that cannot guarantee intellectual honesty. Many people in our society trade time or products for money. As a Registered Nurse, I provided my knowledge, expertise and time to a hospital. The hospital provided compensation for these things in return. Clothing stores provide an array of clothing they are willing to exchange for money. The same is true of every business offering a product or service.

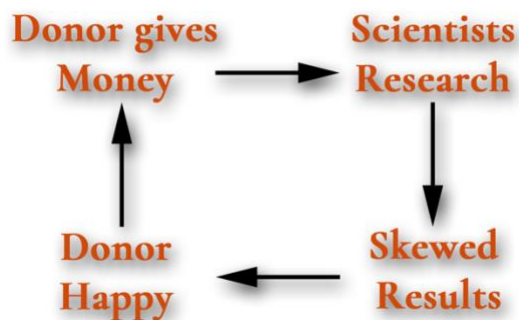

Scientific research does not provide a service to individuals in the community in exchange for money. They do not generate a product for people to buy. They spend their time doing research. Scientists need to eat and a place to live. They need a car for transportation or money to pay for public transportation. They need clothes and personal care items. In our society, these things require money.

Large corporations like scientific research if it proves that their product has value to the public. They are willing to supply donations to research facilities. These donations pay for the lab, the equipment and the hourly wages of the scientists. If the scientific research from this lab proves the product is a detriment to the public, this will hurt the corporation. People will stop buying their product. They will lose money. When the corporation loses money, they have less to give to scientific research or they give their money to another research facility willing to “tweak” the results.

If the lab produces results showing the product is a detriment to society and the donor stops giving them money; the lab closes down, equipment is sold and scientists are no longer employed. Scientists no longer have money to pay for food, clothing, shelter and transportation. Scientists are motivated to produce results that make their donor happy so they continue to receive money from them. Here is an illustration of this cycle:

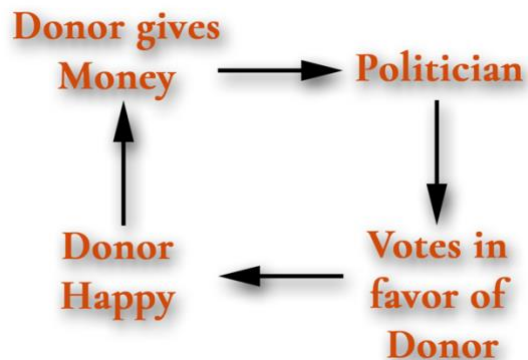

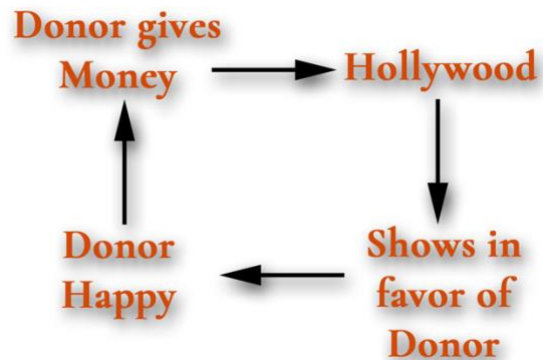

If the donor believes in the Theory of Evolution or their products are dependent upon this theory being true, scientists supported by them are going to produce results and/or draw conclusions in favor of the donor’s belief system. This is true in all sciences: biology, archeology, geology, sociology... None of these disciplines produce a product that can be exchanged for money with the public. None of these disciplines provide a service to the public in exchange for money. They are completely reliant upon donations from large corporations, government or wealthy families. Therefore, their conclusions and results are a reflection of the belief system of their donors and not necessarily reflect the truth. Consider the following questions for a moment:

- Would an individual who does not believe in abortion donate money to an organization that performs abortions?
- Would an individual who is an Atheist donate money to an organization that spreads the Good News of our Messiah to others?

- Would a Christian donate money to a Moslem Mosque?

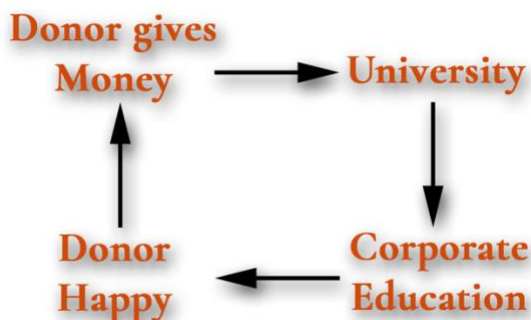

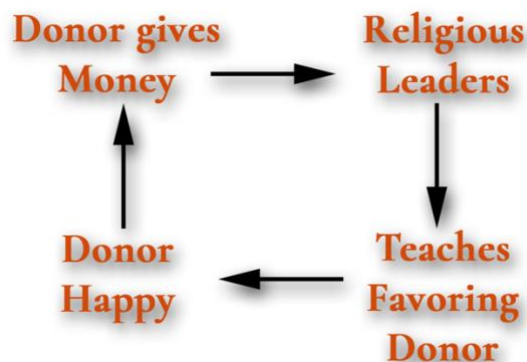

None of these things would happen because the organization desiring support does not reflect the beliefs and values of the donor. The same is true for corporations, governments and wealthy families looking to support science, politics, religion, education and media industries. They do not want to support an industry that conflicts with their own beliefs and values. The same is true of governments. They do not want to support industries that conflict with their laws, philosophy and type of government. This system is pervasive and affects everything reliant upon donations from wealthy donors.

For example, Hollywood produces films in alignment with the values and beliefs of the producers. If the donors are corrupt, their movies and shows will also be corrupt.

Politicians vote according to the beliefs and values of their lobbyists. They do not vote according to the desires of the people they represent. If they do not vote according to the desires of the lobbyists supporting them, they will not receive the money from their donors to get re-elected.

Religious leaders teach according to the desires of their denominations or sects. If they teach anything contrary to the beliefs and values of these organizations, the leaders will be unemployed. This is the problem with organized religion. The doctrine is not a reflection of truth. It is a reflection of the wealthy people donating to the organization and its leadership.

The same is true for educational institutions. Universities rely upon funding from their donors for operating costs. The courses they offer must be in alignment with the beliefs and values of their wealthy donors. These educational systems do not represent truth. They represent the values and beliefs of those who support them.

This system is corrupt. It has been compromised. These facets of society are not a reliable witness because they have something to lose or gain by giving their testimony. In a court of law, testimony from people who benefit from this system would not be considered "credible". Does this mean that any testimony from people who have something to gain or lose is not credible? No, but this factor must be considered when evaluating testimony from them.

As an individual, I am a mother who used to work as a Registered Nurse. I am not a scholar. I do not have a theology degree at some seminary. I am educated in my field of study to help people in the healthcare industry. However, I have a brain. I have eyes and ears. When an educated individual says that the probability of all the amino acids being in one place at one time coming together to form one protein necessary for life is $10^{-40,000}$, I can see for myself that this is not possible under any circumstances. People do not need to be a scholar to come to this conclusion.

Why are scientists, universities and media outlets still giving credibility to this theory?

There is only one answer. They are appealing to the beliefs and values of their donors. These educated people are smart. They are smarter than me. If I can figure it out, so can they. It is really sad that these industries and institutions have compromised themselves. They are no longer credible and reliable. Our Intelligent Designer, Yahuah Elohiym, warned us against these things:

And you shall take no gift: for the gift blinds the wise, and perverts the words of the righteous. (Shemoth/Exodus 23:8)

In these scenarios, the “gifts” are the donations from wealthy donors, governments and corporations. These “gifts” have blinded the eyes of the wise and have perverted the words of the righteous. Our society has failed to heed this warning.

These wealthy donors do not reflect the truth. Their values and beliefs are not in alignment with Our Father’s Way. Therefore, the scholars we rely upon are extremely biased. Their testimony has been tainted. The only way we can find truth is by considering the evidence ourselves and demand the evidence from these scholars, scientists and experts. We have been conditioned to trust these people. However, we need to make a shift and learn to trust ourselves with the things we see and hear with our own eyes and ears. The wealthy donors and corporations are not our Gods. They do not have the message of life. Their ways are designed to generate profits for their own benefit.

Our Father is not like this. His Way is designed to help us prosper and experience overflowing joy. His Way is designed for our good. He wants us to be blessed. He wants us to be wealthy and healthy. He does not think of Himself nor does He take advantage of His creation to satisfy His own desires. He thinks about us and what we need. He thinks about our desires and wants to fulfill them. He thinks about our health and wants us to be healthy and strong. His system is better and it is incorruptible because He can’t be bribed. He can’t and won’t compromise.

People who follow His Way are the same. They cannot be bribed. They will not compromise the truth. They follow the instructions in Shemoth (Exodus) 23:8 and apply it to their lives. If we had a society of people who followed this one instruction, we could rely upon our scholars. We could rely upon our politicians, universities, scientists and entertainment industries. We could trust them to give us honest results and conclusions based on solid, reliable evidence. This is the kind of society produced by the Laws of Yahuah.
